

Gilles Campagnolo (editor),

Liberalism and Chinese economic Development: Perspectives from Europe and Asia,

London & New York, Routledge, published May 2016.

Table of Contents

1. General Introduction. In Search of the meaning of Liberalism in a China confronting crisis.
Gilles Campagnolo

Part I. History of Thought: Contributions to the reception and adoption/adaption of Western thought

2. The Reception Of Kant in China.
Bo Xu

3. Yan Fu and Kaiping Mines: the Meaning of Economic Liberalism in Early Modern China.
Qunyi Liu

4. Liberal Economic Thought in Republican China.
Olga Borokh

5. Modernization Theory, Chinese Modernization, and Social Ethics
Jean-Sébastien Gharbi

Part II. Liberalization and individualization

6. The Essence of Individuality in Kitarō Nishida's works: A Contribution from Eastern Asia to a Transcultural Understanding of the Meaning of Individualism
Andrea Altobrando

7. Reject of Narcissism and Social Essentialism through the Anthropology of Masao Maruyama.
Masataka Muramatsu

8. Dual Individualization in East Asia: Individualization in the Society and in the Family.
Sang-Jin Han and Young-Hee Shim

9. Intensive Secularization of Engaged Buddhism to Heal Isolated People in East Asia: Active Listening by Monks in liberalized Societies of Eastern Asia.
Yoshihide Sakurai

Part III. Liberalism, universalisms and pluralism

10. Self-Determination: What Liberalism is it?
Zhao Lizhi

11. Slaughter's Liberal Theory of International Law: Comments from a Chinese Perspective.
Guimei Bai

12. Liberalization of Russian foreign economic relations in North-Eastern Asia: a viewpoint on Chinese and Japanese business
Igor Botoev and Olga Tugulova

13. Talking Politics in China: Media and 'Social Management' in a China facing fast-pace Modernization.
Santiago Pinault